

Dr Kenny Brophy is a senior lecturer in archaeology at the University of Glasgow and currently head of the archaeology department. He has 25 years of experience of researching Scotland's prehistory, directing major fieldwork projects, and has published extensively on topics related to Neolithic Scotland in particular. Current research interests have focused on the contemporary relevance of prehistory in terms of how prehistory survives today and people interact with it ('urban prehistory') but also critical evaluation of the role that prehistory plays in political and public discourse ('Brexit hypothesis').