

Stuart Hoggan

General Council Assessor on Court

Stuart is a graduate from the University in Natural Philosophy. After a period working in physics research at the University, he joined the Civil Service and has worked in a variety of policy areas with Cabinet-level ministers in successive administrations in Whitehall. These policy areas include local government finance, integration and community cohesion, housing, community empowerment and environmental issues. He has also worked at a senior level in London local government.

He has experience of key aspects of running large organisations, including strategy formulation, governance, business planning, and performance and change management. He has led negotiations across Whitehall departments and with external stakeholders in the public sector, voluntary and community sector, and private industry, both at home and at multi-national level in Brussels and the OECD. He has held responsibility for managing multi-million £ budgets and for leading and developing large teams.

Stuart has now moved on from the Civil Service and spends time in advisory roles for government departments and local authorities, in academic research and in consultancy work in public services. He is also a member of the University's Audit and Risk Committee.
